You are an expert Frontend AI Engineer. Look at the current repository structure. The background GitHub Actions pipeline is crashing during 'yarn build' because of strict type-checking bugs inside old template test runner files.

Execute these two file refactoring tasks immediately:

1. Open 'package.json' inside the root directory. Locate the "scripts" block, find the line `"build": "tsc && vite build"`, and change it to exactly `"build": "vite build"`. This completely strips out the problematic 'tsc' type-checking phase.
2. Open '.github/workflows/deploy.yml'. Locate the step that triggers the production build. Change it to run a simple, direct 'yarn build' compilation script without passing foreign environment flags or running validation test logs.

Save, stage, and commit these changes directly to the cloud repository branch.

Cd ~/stage-template && yarn config set ignore-engines true
